Greetings from the Chair

Dear Alumni, Supporters and Partners of Japanese Studies at Cambridge,

I am delighted to welcome you to our second newsletter, which contains even more news and exciting developments than last time. As you will note, our scholars have been very busy and heavily engaged in numerous international venues. I travelled to Tokyo for a week full of meetings in September, and am happy to report that there is great interest among Japanese organisations and companies to strengthen ties with Cambridge. Dr Barak Kushner organised and ran yet another superb conference, Dr Nilsson-Wright has been busy commenting in media about the North Korea crisis, and Dr Moretti ran the second Emmanuel-Rikkyo Summer Programme. We also feature a report on a special presentation given by Dr Suzuki Norio from Aichi University and a wonderful story about one of our very special alumni, Professor Richard Bowring, the first holder of the Keidanren Chair of Japanese Studies.

Finally, do note our fantastic speaker series, which kicked off on 9 October, and which will continue throughout the semester. We cover a range of fascinating topics, so do feel free to stop by if you are in the Cambridge area.

Please do contact us if you have news to share, and feel free to share the newsletter with our supporters and partners if they have not received it. As always, you can also find us on Facebook and Twitter, and of course on our Japan and the World website. But above all, do not forget our upcoming alumni event, the Tsurugi-no-kai reception at the Royal Society on the evening of 24 November.

Mickey Adolphson
Keidanren Professor and Chair
Japanese Studies
1. Welcome

The Japanese Studies Subject group wishes a warm welcome to new and returning graduate and undergraduate students at the beginning of a new academic year.

2. Academic News
   + The Reality of Postwar Revolution: A View of the Tokyo Preventive Center and Asian Marxism

News from the Japanese Studies Subject Group on recent conferences, research and publications.

Report on a special presentation given by Dr Suzuki Norio, of Aichi University, Japan.

3. New Partnerships in Japan

Professor Mickey Adolphson reports on his recent fundraising trip to Tokyo.

4. North Korea Crisis: Comment from Dr John Nilsson-Wright

A round-up of comment and analysis by Dr John Nilsson-Wright on the current North Korea crisis.

5. East Asia Seminar Series

Take a look at the programme for this year’s Michaelmas Term East Asia Seminar Series.

6. Alumni Profile + Alumni Event

Emeritus Professor Richard Bowring’s alumni profile looks back to the very beginning of Japanese Studies at the University of Cambridge.

Alumni Event information
Welcome to our new students

The Japanese Studies subject group is delighted to welcome all our new and returning graduate and undergraduate students. Below is an introduction to some of our new graduate students and their research areas.

Mi Kwi Cho
PhD in Japanese Studies
Research topic:
My research interest lies in the study of the Japanese minority groups, with a focus on the zainichi Korean community. The period of my research is the end of the Meiji era to the beginning of the Taisho era where the migration of zainichi Koreans to Japan became apparent.

Jade Heyman
MPhil in Japanese Studies
Research topic:
The Import of Japanese Contemporary Literature in Western publishings

Anna Melkina
MPhil in Japanese Studies
Research topic (subject to minor changes):
Contradictions Between Korea and Japan on the Interpretation of History: the Perks and Drawbacks of the Colonial Rule

Jennifer Rose-Miller
MPhil in Japanese Studies
Research topic:
The Evolving Security Relations of Japan and the United Kingdom (looking at the trajectory of security relations between Japan and the UK in the 21st century, in the context of Japan’s evolving security strategy)

Ria Roy
PhD in Japanese Studies
Research topic:
As a Gates Cambridge scholar and a PhD candidate in Korean history with a broader academic interest in Japan and East Asia, I am eager to delve deeper into the question of the manufacture of charisma in North Korea and to trace its transformation from a state committed to Marxist-Leninist views to one that propagates a semi-mystical view of leadership.

Ivan Triola
PhD in Japanese Studies
Research topic:
My PhD research focuses on the role of charisma in the development of New Japanese Religions, especially on Oomotokyo’s off-shoot movements, under the supervision of Prof. Mikael Adolphson.
In my book, I have traced a path of Japanese studies which may be described as “from Kokugaku to Japanology and then Japanese Studies” through the “Aston, Satow and Siebold Collections” at Cambridge University Library. In particular, I focus on the relationship between Satow’s and Aston’s studies and those of Kokugaku. The comparatively smaller Siebold Collection is less relevant, as it contains mainly visual-oriented early Japanese books. The reason for this was that Heinrich could not read Japanese, and his understanding of Japanese studies most resembles his father’s.”

Read more about Koyama-san’s book here. The book is available to purchase on Amazon.
Funded by a Cambridge Humanities Research Grant, Dr. Barak Kushner (University of Cambridge) hosted Dr. Chang Chihyun (Shanghai Jiaotong University), Professor Kishi Toshihiko (Kyoto University) and GIS specialist Ms He Jiawei (Feng Chia University Taiwan), along with graduate students from Shanghai Jiaotong University, Leeds and Bristol Universities over several days to complete the basic stages of creating a new database and analytical website of the geography and statistics of Japanese war crimes in China.

Emerging from Dr. Kushner's ERC project on the dissolution of the Japanese empire, this new project aims to chart and evaluate the spread and shape of justice in postwar East Asia. After these initial steps, the team hopes to gain further funding for expansion of the database and computer modeling to finalize the website and include supportive media and other elements to establish a holistic platform for visualizing the geography and resolution of violence in wartime and postwar East Asia.

“The shifting landscape from imperial to postwar East Asia: War Crimes, Trials, and the Geography of Power”

21 September – 25 September 2017, Cambridge

Congratulations to Dr Laura Moretti on her re-election this year as EAJS Council secretary.

Japanese Studies at the University of Cambridge was well represented at this year’s EAJS conference with three members of academic staff in attendance. Professor Mickey Adolphson, Chair of Japanese Studies, convened a number of panels on pre-modern Japanese History.

Dr Laura Moretti convened a panel titled: Multimodality in Early-modern Books: Enhancing Texts Through Images where she presented her paper Re-imagining words and pictures. From illustrated books to picture-books in Edo-period Japan.

For more information on the EAJS, or to view the programme for EAJS17 follow the link below:

https://www.nomadit.co.uk/eajs/eajs2017/index.shtml
How did the leadership of the Japanese Communist Party, which had been ruthlessly oppressed since the late-1920s, emerge suddenly after defeat in 1945 to become one of the most organized and powerful political groups in post-imperial Japan?

In a guest seminar, Professor Suzuki Norio of Aichi University presented his latest research on the postwar Japan Communist Party and the idea of postwar revolution. Suzuki began with a discussion of the state of archival material on the Japan Communist Party, as well as ongoing efforts of Japanese historians to document party activities during the early-Cold War. In particular, Suzuki’s presentation broke new historical ground by focusing on the hitherto neglected role of the Tokyo Preventive Detention Center as the wartime crucible of the banned Communist Party, from where party leaders and affiliated members debated the shape of the postwar world, the future role of the emperor system, as well as objective conditions for revolution in Japan and East Asia. Through the lives of postwar Japanese Communist Party leaders, such as Tokuda Kyuichi, Nosaka Sanzo, and Ito Ritsu, this presentation revealed the way individual lives and political careers rose and fell with shifts in political and ideological alignments between Moscow and Peking. Bringing together the strands of the wartime and postwar Japanese Communist Party, Suzuki provided a powerful demonstration of the need to see late-imperial and postwar Japanese political history as international history. (The talk and discussion were held in Japanese)
In September, Professor Mickey Adolphson, Chair of Japanese Studies, spent one week in Tokyo to strengthen ties with existing partners and to establish new ones.

After four very busy days with more than 20 meetings, Japanese Studies can now proudly count some ten companies as new partners that will be offering internships to our students. These partners include both established companies, and new start-ups that are already very successful. We expect that we will gradually increase our company partnerships, and we welcome those interested in being part of this network to contact us. For a list of our company-partners, please visit our Internships page. In addition, Professor Adolphson met with two representatives of the governing party: Mr. Wada Munemasa (House of Councillors) and Mr. Yasuhide Nakayama (House of Representatives).

The most exciting part of the trip, however, was a chance to visit the Prime Minister’s residence and meet with Japan’s first lady, Mrs. Abe Akie, when Professor Adolphson took the opportunity to present a Cambridge gift (see photo). In these various meetings, Professor Adolphson discussed the current state of Japanese Studies in the UK and the Japan and the World campaign. There was much interest in our initiative, and we look forward to continuing a dialogue with partners in Japan over the next couple of years to strengthen the relationship between researchers, students and companies in Japan and Cambridge.

On 4 September 2017, Mr. Keisuke OMORI, president of Toshiba International Foundation, visited Cambridge to sign an agreement with the Cambridge Trust and the Japanese Studies section of the University of Cambridge to establish the Toshiba Cambridge Japan and the World Graduate Scholarship. Offering full funding (fees and maintenance) for three years, one scholarship will be awarded to an incoming PhD student in 2018 and another in 2020. The scholarship is open to any applicant who has been offered admission to the PhD programme in Asian & Middle Eastern Studies (Japanese Studies) at the University of Cambridge. Applications will be judged on the merit of their research plans, and preference will be given to those whose research aims to place Japan within the larger context of the world, either in its multilateral focus or through its disciplinary impact.

For more information visit our Funding pages
Regional developments in Northeast Asia have kept John Nilsson-Wright busy commenting at length in the UK and international media.

Dr John Nilsson-Wright, University Senior Lecturer in Modern Japanese Politics and International Relations, has been in high demand for analysis of the dangers associated with North Korea in the wake of Pyongyang’s missile and nuclear tests, and in addition to his online commentary was asked to testify to the House of Commons Defence Committee on the implications of the crisis for the UK.

The North Korean crisis continues to have major implications for the United States and its two key allies, South Korea and Japan - two countries that have had to tackle major political challenges not only in their foreign policy, but also domestically - in the case of South Korea, the dramatic impeachment of President Park Geun-hye and the election of a new progressive government under President Moon Jae-in; in the case of Japan, the challenge of responding North Korea’s two threatening missile launches over Japan and most recently Prime Minister Abe’s snap election call which risks undermining the dominance of the country’s governing Liberal Democratic Party.

Dr Nilsson-Wright’s articles have explored these themes and others and have also been complemented with the publication of a major research paper exploring Japan’s new mini-lateral security partnerships with Australia and India - two vibrant democracies that share many of the geopolitical concerns of Japan. To read more click here.

Japan’s increased activism in foreign policy also poses new opportunities for closer collaboration between Britain and Japan and Dr Nilsson-Wright has been closely involved in a number of initiatives to strengthen ties between the two countries both through his membership (as a director) of the UK-Japan 21st Century Group which met recently in Cambridge at Churchill College and through a five-year major grant project which he leads at Chatham House and which culminated recently in a final fifth year conference in London in September. Further details can be found here.

To read more from Dr Nilsson-Wright on the current North Korean Crisis go to our Japan and the World Website for a full list of articles and media appearances. For regular updates check the News section of the Faculty of Asian and Middle Eastern Studies web-page.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Date</th>
<th>Title</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>10 Mar 2017</td>
<td>Park Geun-hye: How identity politics fuelled South Korean scandal</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>4 Jul 2017</td>
<td>North Korea: What can the outside world do?</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>5 Jul 2017</td>
<td>North Korea new missile test: A game-changer?</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>13 Aug 2017</td>
<td>North Korea crisis: What does Kim Jong-un really want?</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3 Sept 2017</td>
<td>North Korea’s nuclear tests: How should Trump respond?</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>14 Sept 2017</td>
<td>North Korea: How real is Seoul’s assassination threat?</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>27 Sept 2017</td>
<td>North Korea: Where is the war of words with US heading?</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
East Asia Seminar Series
Michaelmas 2017

The Michaelmas Term East Asia Seminar series this year was kicked off with a fascinating talk from Professor Jennifer Lind of Dartmouth College presenting her paper (co-authored with Chikako Ueki of Waseda University) ‘Is Nationalism on the Rise in Japan?’.

Professor Lind delivered her seminar to a full house of students, lecturers, members of the public and press. The talk was followed by half an hour of Q&A and a glass of wine and chance to chat.

For more information on upcoming talks go to the Faculty of Asia and Middle Eastern Studies website

All talks in the East Asia Seminar Series are free to attend, and open to the all. Unless otherwise stated all talks take place 5 - 7pm in Rooms 8/9 of at the Faculty of Asian and Middle Eastern Studies Sidgwick Avenue, Cambridge CB3 9DA

The Japanese Studies Group gratefully acknowledges the financial support of the Great Britain Sasakawa Foundation towards this seminar series

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Date</th>
<th>Title</th>
<th>Speaker</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>MON 9 OCT</td>
<td>Is Nationalism on the Rise in Japan?</td>
<td>Prof. Jennifer Lind, Dartmouth College</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>MON 16 OCT</td>
<td>Mettle of Honor: Shaping the Rules of War in Early Medieval Japan</td>
<td>Prof. Karl Friday, Saitama University</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>MON 30 OCT</td>
<td>The Rise and Fall of Modern Japanese Literature: The Fall</td>
<td>Prof. John Whittier Treat, Yale University</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>MON 13 NOV</td>
<td>Diversity of Jomon Life-ways</td>
<td>Dr Enrico Crema, University of Cambridge</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>MON 20 NOV</td>
<td>Live Rakugo Performance with Live Subtitling</td>
<td>Rakugo Master Yanagiya Kyōtarō</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>TUES 21 NOV</td>
<td>Female Actors in Kabuki: Retrieving a Forgotten Tradition</td>
<td>Prof. Sato Katsura, Aoyama Gakuin</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>MON 27 NOV</td>
<td>On the Transnational Destruction of Cities: What Japan and the U.S.</td>
<td>Prof. Sheldon Garon, Princeton University</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Japan was still so far away (a week on the trans-Siberian) there was no access to contemporary material, and no way of copying anything. There were zero students ahead of us and zero behind, so we felt like lonely pioneers...

Still, I count myself fortunate in my wild choice (for it was considered close to madness at the time), because the study of the language and culture has absorbed my energies for a lifetime.

After graduation, I tried airline management with Cathay Pacific for two years and quickly realised that I was not cut out for business. Back to Cambridge for a three-year PhD on Mori Ōgai (I was the only graduate student), and Tokyo University (another lonely place!) followed by my first academic job at Monash University in Melbourne, another world altogether where Japanese was already being taught to large classes at Junior School level. From there I went to Columbia, then Princeton, and then finally back to Cambridge in 1985, where there was a big job to do, putting the subject back on its feet after a series of savage cuts. Believe it or not, there was serious talk of closing Japanese Studies down completely in the mid 1980s.

Not many students want to go into academia these days. I am not sure why, but I hope it is not that we have been bad role models. It is not for everyone, of course, but I would still recommend it for the few who are brave enough, or perhaps foolhardy enough, to trust that a job might possibly be forthcoming after years struggling through all that barbed wire, as someone once said to me, trying to describe what Japanese looked like to the uninitiated.

This and other graduate stories are available to read on the Success Stories page of the faculty website. If you have a story to tell please let us know, we would love to hear it!
Japanese Studies Alumni Event 2017

24 November 2017 // 18:00 - 22:00 // The Royal Society

The evening will be a celebration of the many wonderful students who have come through and enriched the department, and a chance to (re)connect with classmates, friends, faculty and supporters. We will also be sharing some exciting news about the future of Japanese Studies at Cambridge.

We would love to get as many of our Japanese Studies alumni as possible involved - if you have studied Japanese at Cambridge but haven’t already received an invitation, and would like to attend please email Freddie Semple, Japanese studies admin assistant at fs468@cam.ac.uk.

We look forward to seeing you there!